“Parenting in the Digital Age”

Parenting is hard. Parenting in the Digital Age is really hard. With numerous screens, social networks, ubiquitous access to anything, anytime, anywhere, and almost non-stop stimulation when “plugged in,” it’s no wonder kids (and the rest of us) are so mesmerized by the new digital world. It’s also no wonder why there is so much conflict around digital spaces and behaviors.

Come listen and discuss strategies for parenting in the Digital Age with Professor Eric Anctil as we explore our new reality and how best to not only survive the digital revolution, but to help our kids thrive in it.

Eric Anctil is a professor of media and technology in the School of Education at the University of Portland and the author of many books and articles on education. His work broadly centers on K-20 education and the nexus of media, technology, and the curriculum. A former middle and high school teacher, Professor Anctil is a graduate of Central Catholic High School and a native Portlander. He received a dual bachelor's degree from the University of Oregon, a master's degree from Portland State University, and a Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Professor Anctil has taught in higher education since 2000 and lives in Portland.
